Excerpt: . . . nd gilt clock, also a well-worn, brown portmanteau, and a white and tan fox-terrier stretched at full length on the hearth-rug. Down below in the street there was the rumbling of wheels, the busy morning traffic, occasionally the cheerful voices of gay Parisians as they passed by, occupied, no doubt, but not pressed and hurried as Londoners are. These were the sights and sounds which first greeted Donovan on a day which he was never to forget, a day every detail of which was burnt in upon his brain with the ineffaceable brand of suffering. He woke late, rang the bell for his coffee, and then lay musing. He was a rich man! The sensation was strange. A year ago he had been cast adrift, friendless, almost penniless; he had started with hardly any possession in the world, except the brown portmanteau and the fox-terrier which met his gaze from the other side of the room. Now he was rich, a well-to-do man, for not many hours ago, when the faint dawn was just beginning to break, he had won a fortune at baccarat. In spite of Elliss wickedness, in spite of life-long injustice, he had done well for himself. And yet, after all, did it make so very much difference Was this great success, this unparalleled good fortune, really worth having 1 His heart did not feel any lighter, life did not look more inviting when he got up that day. At the...
