Excerpt: . most untechnical of books, and that from nothing Christianit has suffered more prejudice than from the metaphysical jargon of t e theological schools, most persons will think that the maxim impugned by Mr. Coleridge is a reasonable and useful one. The vices of his own stvle are attributable, in great measure, to his fondness for verbal refinements and a technical nomenclature. a final idea, to which the actual form or mode of things is only an approximation. A Constitution is an idea arising out of the idea of a State; and because our whole history, from Alfred onward, demonstrates the con tinued influence of such an idea, or ultimate aim, on the minds of our forefathers, in their characters and functions as public men, alike in what they resisted and in what they claimed; in the institutions and forms of polity which they...
