THE CONVENTION AND ITS WORK In the account of the Twenty-first Convention, published in the Journal of September, 1901, are to be found these statements: Of all conventions that the Order has ever held, the recent one at Richmond did the least business. That is a good omen for the Order. It means that the men who compose the fraternity are satisfied with the laws they have at present. Now, while desiring to make no invidious comparison between the business results of the two conventions, as shown by the minutes of each, it is safe to say that the Twenty-second Convention was characterized, not by an excess of fun over work, but by a balancing of the two. The Convention was called to order by the K. C. , Hon. Ed. Chambers Smith, and the...
