We are in the midst of a fearful civil war, the aim of which extends far beyond the humbling of our nag, the wasting of our resources, the destruction of our armies, and the seizure of our capital. Those are injuries which might be repaired. In the war of 1812 with Great Britain, that was the object of the English cabinet, and, in part, they temporarily succeeded, even to the seizure of Washington and the burning of its public edifices. But from that contest the American people emerged with honor, their gallantry vindicated, their pride encouraged, their power and vigor and prestige...
